TWO-FACED TRUTH

Clayton Llewellyn

Two-Faced Truth is a two-person show (except Clayton Llewellyn made all of the drawings). This exhibit examines the often held idea that there is art designated as fine art and destined for gallery and museum walls versus illustrations which are destined for other uses and thus not considered as important or deemed to have the same stature. The fine artist Clayton Llewellyn and the illustrator/tattoo artist named Claybone spent years trying to keep the worlds separate. Llewellyn has come to understand that his drawings are stronger and more authentic when he lets fine art and illustration bleed and cross-germinate by using tools and ideas from each discipline in his art making, teaching and tattooing practices. Llewellyn's work is an authentic blend of these two sometimes disparate artistic disciplines.
